the Soviet constitution. The course consisted of four years of study and students were required to reside at the school; however, they were permitted to go to their homes week-ends and during a short summer vacation. Upon completion of the course, they were allegedly sent for two years to another school for advanced artillery study.

the advanced courses were possibly taught in Riga and Omak, where there were unidentified advanced artillery academies. After completing the advanced school, students were commissioned as lieutenants, while the honor students were commissioned as senior lieutenants.

c. Second Moscow Artillery Preparatory School (Vtoroye MAPU)

This school was located on ulitsa Mashyna Stroyeniya in the Proletarskiy Rayon of Moscow.

the courses at the First Moscow Preparatory Artillery Training School and the Second Moscow Artillery Preparatory School were identical.

d. Moscow Aviation Preparatory School (Aviatsionnoye Moskovskoye Podgotovitel'noye Uchilishche)

Students who lived in Moscow were permitted to reside at home if they wished. The prerequisites for the school were the same as those for the artillery preparatory schools. After graduation, students went to an officers' preparatory school in Moscow.

e. Mechanized Troops Academy (Akademiya Bronetankovykh i Mekhanizirovannykh Voysk)

f. Frunze Military Academy (Voenaya Akademiya imeni Frunze) 1

g. Dzerzhinskiy Military Artillery Academy (Voenaya Artilleriyskaya Akademiya imeni Dzerzhinskova) 1
